This innovative six week course, which will see students cooking a full menu each week, has been created specifically to help teenagers learn a new skill during and after lockdown.

As well as learning kitchen skills and all-important kitchen hygiene, students will whip up fluffy pancakes and buttery crumble cakes, a Mexican chilli with spicy guacamole, classic fish pie topped with crispy filo pastry, and many more family-friendly dishes, including the ultimate branch.

British chef Padma Sneidman said: “We’ve known for running courses to build confidence in the kitchen for students young and old who can cook when you want your new skill to be something to make you feel good about yourself and to share with others and make other people happy. Our online courses effectively deliver the teacher to your home kitchen, so teens can get to work in a familiar environment, and have the satisfaction of cooking proper meals for the family.

Many schools struggle to bring good quality cooking courses to their students because of lack of experience and qualified teachers.
